A. PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

The U.S. Embassy in Kigali announces an open competition for organizations to submit applications to carry out a program to improve expropriation and compensation processes and practices by engaging the Rwandan government institutions involved in expropriation, increasing citizens’ understanding of their rights in cases of expropriation, and establishing a mechanism to assist poor citizens to challenge land valuations in cases of expropriation. The goal of the project is to empower citizens to advocate for their individual land rights related to expropriation and advocate for broader policy and procedural changes as needed. Please follow all instructions below.

Background:

The 2021 Investment Code forbids the expropriation of private property in the “public interest” unless the owner is fairly compensated. An expropriation law came into force in 2015, which included explicit protections for property owners. However, a 2017 study by Rwanda Civil Society Platform argues that the government conducts expropriations on short notice and does not provide sufficient time or support to help landowners fairly negotiate compensation. The report includes a survey that found only 27% of respondents received information about planned expropriation well in advance of action. While mechanisms exist to challenge the government’s offer, the report notes that landowners are required to pay all expenses for the second valuation, a prohibitive cost for rural farmers or the urban poor. Media have reported that wealthier landowners with the ability to challenge valuations have received higher amounts.

Other NGO and media reports argue that the definition of “public interest” has been stretched to help private investors acquire land below market value to implement real estate and investment projects that are in line with the government’s ambitious goals to transform the country into a middle-income economy or to assist local governments to achieve the goals in their performance contracts (referred to in Rwanda as “Imihigo”). In several cases, poor planning and budgeting has caused delayed payment of expropriation proceeds, and several residents claimed that they had to vacate before being paid. In other cases, poor technical skills in land/property economics have resulted in poor property valuation. There have also been reports of “partial compensation”; in these cases, part of a property is expropriated, and the owner receives compensation only for that part, regardless of whether the entire property has lost value. (For example, if an owner’s parking lot is expropriated, the remaining property may lose value, but the owner would only receive compensation for the parking lot.) in other cases, residents may only be offered relocation (in-kind compensation) when they would prefer financial compensation, or vice versa.

Program Objectives:

Objective 1: Improve citizens’ understanding of their land rights and options for recourse in cases of expropriation

Objective 2: Strengthen the capacity of civil society to protect and advocate for citizens’ rights in cases of expropriation

Objective 3: Engage Rwandan government institutions involved in expropriation to ensure instances of legal expropriation are accompanied by fair compensation

In accordance with these objectives, the activity will have two main lines of effort. One will consist of outreach activities to increase citizens’ knowledge and understanding of their land rights and contacts for assistance with expropriation cases. The other will consist of training for local civil society organizations (CSOs) on advocacy for land reform, legal aid assistance, and challenging valuations in expropriation cases.

Potential Activities for Objective 1:
- Host radio and/or TV shows on expropriation issues, processes, and rights
- Organize workshops in selected districts to discuss expropriation issues

Potential Activities for Objective 2:
- Conduct training workshops for CSOs on advocacy for land reform
- Support poor and marginalized populations to challenge valuations in expropriation cases
- Support follow-up on transition of land parcel geospatial data to the public domain to increase transparency with respect to land ownership

Potential Activities for Objective 3:
- Organize a roundtable with CSO and Rwandan government representatives to discuss expropriation issues
- Organize a roundtable with CSO representatives and representatives of the Parliament’s commission on expropriation to discuss expropriation issues

Applicants should budget for all anticipated costs associated with the project.
